Fifteenth President of India

Introduction:

The head of state of the Republic of India is the president. The president serves as both the chief executive and the supreme commander of the Indian armed forces.

When India's constitution went into effect on January 26, 1950 and the country became a republic, the position of president was established.

The legislative legislatures of each of India's states and territories, as well as both chambers of the Indian Parliament, who are all directly elected, participate in the indirect election of the president.

According to Article 54 of the Constitution, the members of an electoral college which includes the elected members of both Houses of Parliament and the Legislative Assemblies of all States elect the president of India.
